Did You Just Hear That?

It is Sunday morning. I woke about an hour ago and the thought of crawling back into bed is enticing. And why not? The house is quiet. The kid is grown and living in another state so he isn't here to bother me. Both cats are asleep and they aren't interested in being fed or chasing each other throughout the house. But what about that hubby dude of mine? On Sunday mornings Elkanah works as the on-air personality at a christian radio station so he isn't here either. Yes the thought of returning to bed is enticing. And considering that I got to sleep after 4 a.m. then slept about 2 ½ hours, I'm pretty sure that those pillows will be cradling this tired head of mine before too many more minutes have passed.

Before crawling back in bed I want to share something that I just heard. A few minutes ago I called Elkanah for no particular reason other than to say "Hi" to him. While he was listening to me yawning he interrupted with the remark, "I wish you could have just heard what this guy just said."

I said that my hubby dude works at a christian radio station. This station plays a lot of material sent in by radio preachers. While I was yawning at Elkanah and he was playing a game on his computer, one of those radio preachers was busy waxing eloquently in the background. Who that preacher was I didn't ask. But he made a comment that Elkanah jumped on and made that remark to me.

"What did he say?" I asked then yawned again.

"He said that 'some people state that the doctrine of immortality of the soul is not a Biblical doctrine. But what these people don't understand is that the doctrine of immortality of the soul is one of the fundamental doctrines of christianity'."

I shook my head and asked, “Does that make any sense?”

Elkanah answered, “In other words, he just admitted that christianity is a false religion because it teaches human doctrines not Biblical doctrines.”

OK, yeah, when you put it that way it sorta does make sense. It's what a lot of people are coming to realize. This so-called christianity which the church promotes isn't actually Biblical it's merely the doctrines of men.

“These people say they honor me, but their hearts are far away.
Their worship is worthless, for they teach their man-made laws
instead of those from God. – Matthew 15:8, 9 Living Bible

May you find peace, joy, and much love by knowing the true God.
